

The Public Diplomacy Council is a nonprofit organization committed to the academic study, professional practice, and responsible advocacy of public diplomacy. Founded in 1988, the Council serves the community of public diplomacy practitioners, professors, students, writers and others interested in public diplomacy. As the leading non-governmental voice for public diplomacy in the United States, we organize activities and advocate for greater understanding and support of the profession and its work.

Members of the Council are elected by the Board from nominations submitted by Council members to the Board, which seeks to ensure a broad range of talent and experience that reflects diversity in professional backgrounds and skills to include demonstrated accomplishment in government and non-governmental organizations. The Board takes into account sustained distinguished professional service, demonstrated continued interest in public diplomacy, and a willingness to contribute actively to the work of the Council. Residence in the Washington, DC area is not a criterion for membership.
