

Biographical Sketch

Kyle A. Long, Ph.D. is Adjunct Assistant Professor of International Education and UNESCO Co-Chair of International Education for Development at the George Washington University. He teaches graduate-level courses on international education and public diplomacy, international development and higher education, and comparative education. His forthcoming book, The Emergence of the American University Abroad (Brill | Sense, February 2020), traces the development of independent, U.S. higher education institutions overseas from the mid-19th century to the present.

Dr. Long also serves as a consultant in the higher education practice of a global research and analytics firm, where he advises college and university executives in the United States, Canada, and Australia on issues ranging from academic program development to enrollment management to branding and marketing. He has consulted for international development agencies and higher education associations as well. Prior to teaching and consulting, Dr. Long was an administrator at the American University of Iraq, Sulaimani.

He earned a Ph.D. in International and Comparative Education from Columbia University (NY), a master's degree from the Great Books program at St. John's College (MD), and a bachelor's degree in Classics from Wabash College (IN). He lives in Washington, DC with his wife Stacie, a graphic designer.